FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

- When will the new building open?
  We are still in the initial design and planning phase but current plans call for the new building to be open for classes in fall 2019.

- How large will the building be?
  Again, we are still in the initial design phase but the new building is expected to be four stories tall and be approximately 225,000 square feet. It will be one of the signature buildings on the University of Cincinnati campus.

- Where will the new building be located?
  The new building will be built on the area currently occupied by the Myers Alumni Center and the Faculty Club. This is very close to Lindner Hall, the current home of the Lindner College of Business.

- Will some business school classes still be held in Lindner Hall once the new building opens?
  That is still being determined and additional information will be released closer to the opening of the new building.

- Who is handling the design and construction of the new building?
  The renowned architecture firms of Henning Larsen Architects in Copenhagen, Denmark, and KZF Design in Cincinnati are designing and overseeing the construction of the new building.

- What is the construction budget for the new building?
  We are still in the design and planning phase of the project but the total building budget is estimated to be approximately $120 million.

- What will happen to the Myers Alumni Center?
  The University of Cincinnati is actively planning for the future home of the UC Alumni Association. The exact location will be determined in the near future and additional details will be released in the coming months.
